EARLY PLOWING.
Despite all that has been said and written about early ploughing, there is reason to believe that even yet its advantages are not generally appreciated. The early ploughing of the country the work of ploughing is not undertaken until late in spring, while the soil is often broken until immediately before it is sown with seed.

On all except light sandy soils the time to take preparations in hand, if the best results are to be obtained, is in the case of stubble land as early in autumn as possible, and with low land the soil should be to have the work completed by the end of January. The nature of the Irish climate is such that the soil is not too dry in the spring, and it is impossible to work heavy lands in spring often unduly delay the sowing of the seed. The time, therefore, to do the work done during autumn, when the days are long, the weather is fine, and the conditions are favourable.

For a successful root crop it is essential that the land should be not only thoroughly cultivated, but also rendered absolutely free from weeds and grass. The proper development of the young seedlings are essential with the view of obtaining a crop, and fine, not too dry at sowing time, and the soil should be in the best condition to attain such conditions. The root crop should be ploughed as early as possible, so that they may reap the full benefit of the influence of air and water in the soil.

The ploughing of the ground is often delayed because of a mistaken idea. As very little growth takes place after the middle of October, the soil is not so dry in the autumn as it is in the spring, and consequently, if it is then broken up, the vegetable matter in the soil will be decomposed more rapidly, and the soil will be in a better condition for the sowing of the seed. It is an important consideration. Lesser quantities of manure are required for a crop of roots than for a crop of grain, and the manure should be applied in the autumn, as it is then that the soil is in the best condition to receive it.

In addition to the advantages detailed above, autumn ploughing has the effect of preventing the growth of insects, particularly wire worms and leather jacks, which are often found in the soil in the spring. The vegetable matter in the soil is also in a better condition for the sowing of the seed, and the soil is in a better condition to receive it.

IMPROVING PASTURES BY POULTRY.
The beneficial effects of running poultry on pastures have been known for many years, and it is a well-known fact that the presence of a few chickens on a pasture will improve it in a remarkable manner. The reason for this is that the chickens will eat the weeds and grass which are not eaten by the cattle, and they will also eat the droppings of the cattle, which are a valuable fertilizer. The chickens will also keep the pasture free from insects, and they will also keep the soil in a better condition for the sowing of the seed.

WEEDS AS SOIL INDICATORS.
There is sometimes complaint made about the quality of the soil, and it is often found that the soil is not in the best condition for the sowing of the seed. The reason for this is that the soil is not in the best condition for the sowing of the seed, and it is often found that the soil is not in the best condition for the sowing of the seed. The reason for this is that the soil is not in the best condition for the sowing of the seed, and it is often found that the soil is not in the best condition for the sowing of the seed.

ULSTER FARMERS' UNION.

Council and Various Problems.
